

Conflict of Interest Waiver

Byrd Accounting in the past has been engaged by you and your spouse to do your individual tax returns and any other agreed upon work. You have requested that our firm continue to provide these services to you despite the fact that you and your spouse are in the process of marital dissolution.

A potential conflict of interest inherently exists in this situation due to the pending dissolution of your marriage. In preparing the tax returns for each of you, there may be situations in which one party will be benefited and the other will be negatively affected. If we become aware of such situations, we will disclose the consequences of such tax strategies to both of you and it will be up to both of you to agree in writing as to how we will proceed. If no agreement can be reached between the parties, then you can expect that our firm will disengage from providing such services to both of you.

Your signature below is acknowledgment that you both understand and waive any conflict of interest as described above.

I have read, understand and agree to waive any conflict of interest resulting from the continued engagement of Byrd Accounting for services rendered.
